

Oral History Projects in the Heritage Room Local History Manuscript Collection

History

The Heritage Room Local History Manuscript Collection was one of the first projects of the founders of the Heritage Room. The creation of the Heritage Room was inspired by the interest in history generated by the approaching Bicentennial. Northeast Tarrant County local history societies and Tarrant County history enthusiasts approached officials of the Northeast Campus with the idea of establishing a center on the campus for the collection and preservation of documents and artifacts relating to Tarrant County history – specifically to the history of Northeast Tarrant County. The Hurst Bicentennial Committee adopted the creation of this local history museum as one of its projects. Duane Gage, a history instructor on the Northeast Campus, was appointed Chair of a committee to pursue the collection of local history records. Space for the museum was created as part of the renovation of the Northeast Campus Learning Resource Center, and the Heritage Room opened in 1975

Scope and Description

Oral history played a significant part in the collection development goals of the Heritage Room in the 1970s and 1980s. Duane Gage and a few other history instructors encouraged their students to collect oral histories from their various communities and among friends and family. While the equality is uneven, most are quite well done. Most of the interviewees were elderly in the 1970s and 80s – many in their 80s or 90s – so the material tends to focus on the late 19th century through the 1920s, the Great Depression and the coming of World War II. The interviews are a good source for researchers looking into social and political history, women's history, race relations, and the transition from an agrarian to an industrial society, and the impact of the various social changes that occurred in the aftermath of World War II. The Tarrant County Historical Commission and other Tarrant County local history and genealogy groups also cooperated with Gage and the Heritage Room staff to collect oral histories. These tend to be more professionally done than the student oral history interviews. Oral Histories of Fort Worth, Inc. worked with the Tarrant County Historical Commission to record and transcribe oral history interviews. Twenty five of these transcripts are in this collection, most of them done by Ruby Schmidt in 1975. The Tarrant County Archives has both transcripts and tapes of these interviews.
